Vendors come together helping each other out

Vendor Jim Pierce of PolyPortables (right) was one of many covering the booth in Lindy's absence. I didn't get this guys name but I can almost hear him say, "OK Jim, the boss isn't here, so what is your best price on 1,000 gallons!"

As the PSAI annual trade show moved into its final day, many of the attendees reported not feeling well, suffering from flu like symptoms. One of those, Lindy Boehme of Chempace was scheduled to work her booth on the trade show floor with no one to take her place. As morning approached, Lindy was sure that the booth would set empty moving her to request a note be attached to her booth letting customers and friends know why she wasn't there.

As this was going on, the associates (vendors) were meeting tending to the business of the day when Senior Associate Director Gregg DeLong of PolyJohn proposed that the associates man her booth with volunteers serving an hour each which was quickly embraced by most of those in attendance. "This is the way it should be, people watching after each other," noted DeLong.

Teary eyed, Lindy shared "when Millicent told me about all the vendors which volunteered to help out, it literally left me speechless. I can't begin to explain how it touched my soul. What a wonderful group of caring and thoughtful individuals," she said. "I've always said that the PSAI convention, for me, is more like a family reunion than a business show. This act of caring shows just how close and supportive the group actually is. I only hope that some day I can return the kindness" she closed.
